VINTAGE CONDITIONS

Above average winter rainfalls in winter lead to a full soil profile at the start of the growing season, setting up for a full lush vintage. A severe hail event in October dropped the yields in parts of the region with some vineyards completely decimated.

The temperature was below average until December. The summer weather dried out with significantly lower rainfall than average at cool moderate temperatures. Although the average temperature was higher, the temperature never exceeded 40°C and rarely above 35°C.

The lack of severe heat events helped the vines produce wines of pure fruit flavours with good weight and texture. The tannins were well polymerised with good colour density which should result in long living wines.
